profit of the bank instead of increasing it.

It is especially important at the present moment that not a dollar of Southern banking capital should be sent out of the South for speculative operations or for loans on high rates of interest in New York or other money centres. The individual money owner may, if he prefers to do so, use his money in this way, but the banks of a community owe to that community a certain responsibility which they cannot shirk, or if they do shirk it, it will ultimately cost them far more than they win. they win.

It may be remarked, as we go along, that the Richmond banks and none of the Virginia banks are among those that are alleged to be looking for higger profits in Wall Street. The Virginia banks are looking after Virginia, first, last and all the time.

Young Millionare Now Has Nothing---

Byron Chandler, the famous Broadway spender, testifies that he now has nothing. It will be remembered that for years this young man startled even New York by his wild escapades and lavish spending. He spent two fortunes almost as soon as he got them.

Here's the point: If this boy's grand-parents, who left him the money, had put it in trust for him until he had reached the age of discretion, this tragedy would never have occurred.
